How to Read a Nautical Chart

Will help you unravel the mystrey of charts. Nautical charts give us the "landmarks of the sea" buoys, markers, shoreline features, water depth, bottom type, magnetic compass variation, and the latitude and longitude of these features. Charts also warn us of dangerous areas, enabling us to determine safe passage. This course will provide the navigator with the knowledge to interpret a chart's contents to navigate safely to his or her destination and return to port. Presented by Flotilla 114, Bill Anderson Instructor.

THE GOSSIP BOARD

New Art Piece in Chula Vista Boat Basin
Remember the old eyesore Power Plant? Well the Port of San Diego commissioned a local artist, Michael Leaf, to assemble a piece of art from the leftover pieces of the South Bay Power Plant. His new art piece can be found on the same peninsula as the boat launch. It's certainly worth a look, because it's an excellent perception of the Bay.

Marine Group has been busy with ships from another time.
Half the fleet from the San Diego Maritime Museum is at the Marina Group Boat Yard, including the new San Salvador HMS Surprise, and our very own Bill of Rights & The Media, for all their repairs, which seems endless. (The 1905 Steam Ship Media was there as well, I missed my picture opportunity.)
